

OSI Communications Facilitator Bios

Laura Brahm, Web Officer

Laura Brahm has been editor of the Open Society Institute website since 2004. She is also responsible for—and a little obsessed with—the organization’s social media. She has previously worked for the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum and the Carnegie Council on Ethics & International Affairs. She has a BA in politics from the University of California, Santa Cruz, and an MA in political science from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

She lives in Brooklyn with her daughter, husband, and four cats.

Stephen Hubble, Communications Officer

Stephen Hubbell is communications officer for the Open Society Fellowship Program. He works closely with fellows to develop media strategies to broaden public awareness of their work.

Hubbell joined the Open Society Institute after 20 years as a journalist and editor. He has worked as a senior editor at Metropolitan Books and at Harper's, where he edited the work of many notable writers, including Anne Fadiman, Harold Brodkey, Elliott Currie, Marilynne Robinson, Alan Weisman, Arlie Hochschild, and Edward Fox. He has also served as Cairo correspondent for The Nation, for whom he covered the first Gulf War and the rise of political Islam in the Middle East.

He received his bachelor's degree in government from Wesleyan University.

Emma Lozman, Web Producer

Emma Lozman is OSI’s web producer within the communications team. She works closely with programs to enhance their online presence and amplify their work on Soros.org. Before Emma joined OSI, she was a consultant to Bermuda’s Ministry of Education, coordinating an IT curriculum written by Stanford University for the island’s public high schools. Between trips to Bermuda, Emma also worked as a freelance travel writer (for Britain's Rough Guides travel series) and business writer. She has a bachelor’s degree in an interdisciplinary major that combined computer science, philosophy, linguistics, and psychology, as well as a master’s degree in philosophy, both from Stanford.