

U.S. Program Staff Retreat Facilitator Bio

José Acevedo

N. José Acevedo is president of New World Consulting and an expert in facilitating the development of leadership skills and the creation of high-performing organizations. José works with a broad range of companies to help them become effective learning teams that function innovatively in pursuit of specific business results.

José has spent the last 22 years helping his clients effectively harness the potential of their people by helping them move beyond their self-imposed limits, unleash creativity and improve their decision-making processes. During this time, he has personally worked with thousands of individuals in group workshops, consulting engagements and one-on-one coaching sessions.

For the last year José has also been the lead consultant in an organizational developmental project with the largest sports architectural firm in the world. His assistance increased the overall effectiveness of the leadership team while developing a work environment that resulted in greater productivity and the retention of the firm's most talented people.

José is currently one of the senior trainers for Rockwood Leadership and was one of the lead facilitators of JPMorgan's Strategies for Personal Leadership program for over six years. He has also designed and taught special programs on team learning skills, communicating for action and cultural change, both in English and Spanish, for organizations throughout the world, such as Hewlett Packard, HOK Sport, IBM, LexisNexis, JPMorganChase, Healthcare Without Harm, New World Foundation, Donna Karan and Make the Road by Walking .

José spent three years as an attorney for District Council 37 in New York City. He also spent two years on the staff of Landmark Education, a training group specializing in personal effectiveness. He received his BA from The City College of New York, and his JD from New York University.
